BROTHERS DIE CLOSE TO-GETHER

Charles S. Bruner

Charles S. Bruner of Cresson, Pa., and son of the late N. S. Bruner and Laura V. Bruner, of Hyndman, Pa., died Friday evening, June 6, at 5.30 at the home of his late brother Frank W. Bruner at Johnstown, Pa.

The immediate cause of the death of this comparatively young man, he was forty one in December last, was the shock of seeing his elder brother Frank lying a corpse. Only those who knew the family—the close tie and the unusual devotion of every member can appreciate what the three brothers Frank, Charles and Roy meant to each other.

Less than a year ago the father, W. S. Bruner of Hyndman, and very well known in Bedford County, dropped dead a few minutes after he had been seated at the supper table. Nine days later Charles, six feet tall and of superb proportions, was stricken with paralysis. For a year he has been struggling back to health. He was very much better and on June 1st returned to Johnstown after spending a week with his mother in Hyndman.

Mr. Bruner until his sickness was Supt. of the Cresson Division of the P. R. R. Co. and made his home with his wife and daughter in Cresson. He was unusually robust, of an amiable disposition and one of the most popular employees of the road.

He was a member of the Presbyterian church of Cresson; of the Hyndman Camp Modern Woodmen of America; of the Moxham Lodge Independent Order of Odd Fellows; of the Patton Lodge Free and Accepted Masons; of the Williamsport Consistory Ancient Accepted Scottish Rites Masons and of Jaffa Temple Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles; of the Mystic Shrine, Altoona.

Funeral services were held at his residence in Cresson Monday evening June 9 at 7.30, the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church officiated. Interment was made in Cresson cemetery Tuesday morning.

Mr. Bruner is survived by his wife, Ida Caldwell, daughter Dorothy Virginia, age ten, of Cresson; his mother, Laura Virginia Bruner and sister Miss Pearl Bruner, of Hyndman; and by a brother Roy Blair Bruner of Glenn Campbell, Frank W. Bruner his elder brother was buried in Hyndman Sunday.

Francis W. Bruner

Francis W. Bruner, eldest son of the late W. S. Bruner and Laura V. Bruner of Hyndman died at Johnstown Thursday morning, June 5, at 2.30.

Mr. Bruner, who was a telegraph operator for the B. and O. R. R. Co. was on duty when he was seized suddenly with cramps. Before a doctor could reach him he was unconscious, and within a few minutes was dead. Acute indigestion was given as the cause.

Mr. Bruner was born in Buffalo Mills, May 11, 1897. Later he moved with his parents to Hyndman where he attended the public schools and where later he married Miss Elsie Veda Malsberry who survives him. It was in Hyndman too that he began his career as an operator. Eight years ago he moved to Johnstown where, by his genial personality and consistent christian character, he made a host of friends.

The body of Mr. Bruner was brought to Hyndman Friday evening where it rested amid a bower of flowers until Sunday when funeral

Federal-Aid Roads In New York New Jersey and Pennsylvania

The Federal-aid highway system in New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey embraces 9,490 miles according to the Bureau of Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture. The mileage by States is as follows:

New York	4,498
Pennsylvania	3,954
New Jersey	1,038

This system of roads has been designated by the States and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as provided by the Federal Highway Act of 1921. According to this Act the State highway departments were to designate a system of roads not exceeding 7 per cent of the total rural mileage for improvement with Federal aid and on which the Government was to pay up to 50 per cent of the cost.

Appropriations for Federal aid, totaling $540,000,000 have been made since 1916 and considerable progress has already been made on the system. In this group of States the total apportionment has been as follows:

New York	$23,045,042
Pennsylvania	21,285,659
New Jersey	5,652,333

Although two of the appropriations were made before the Federal Highway Act restricted the expenditure to roads of the Federal-aid system, by far the greater part of the expenditure has been on the designated system. On April 30 the Bureau of Public Roads reports the status of construction as follows.

State	Total Mileage		Mileage approved not yet approved for construction	Funds available for new projects
	completed	under construction
New York	512	526	119	$4,807,428
Pennsylvania	721	126	217	1,485,383
New Jersey	141	49	19	422,379

The above figures show that 2,431 miles of the 9,490 miles embraced in the system in these States are either completed, under construction or scheduled for construction at an early date. In addition the States have improved roads on the system independent of Federal aid.

The whole Federal-aid highway system embraces approximately 170,000 miles of road. A careful study is being made of its present condition of improvement. An approximate estimate based upon incomplete studies is that at the end of the year there were about 60,000 miles of surface roads and 8,700 miles graded, which leaves nearly 110,000 miles yet to be surfaced.

To bring this system up to serviceable standards, therefore, within the full decade ahead, will mean a surfacing program of about 11,000 miles for each of the 10 years; this in addition to additions to the system, the separation of grade crossings, reconstruction and such other work necessary.

Elizabeth S. Stapleton

Elizabeth Spangler Stapleton, wife of Charles Franklin Stapleton, passed away at her home in Saxton, on Friday, June 6, after a prolonged, painful illness. She was born near Mercersburg, Franklin County, Nov. 1, 1846. She was married March 7, 1875. She is survived by her husband and the following children:

Mrs. John P. Sweet, of Everett, Pa.; Mrs. Harriette L. Hancock of Johnstown; Mrs. Mary Ella Howell, of Camden, N. J.; Mrs. Edna A. Whittaker, of Holidaysburg; Howard C. Stapleton and Mitchell F. Stapleton of Saxton. One brother, Albert Spangler, of Peoria, Ill.; and the following sisters survive: Miss Sue Spangler and Mrs. Lillian Cook, of Cassville, Pa.; Mrs. Ida Morgart, of Soltillo, Pa.; Mrs. D. R. Black, of Huntingdon.

The funeral service was conducted by her pastor Rev. A. B. VanOrmer in St. Matthew's Lutheran Church, Saxton, where she had long been a loyal member. She was buried in the Oaklark cemetery, Saxton.

ORGAN RECITAL IN LUTHERAN CHURCH

Bedford is to have a treat in the coming of J. Harold Weisel, organist, who will play a "Dedication Recital" on Tuesday night next in Trinity Lutheran Church this place. The splendid new Moller Pipe Organ just installed will doubtless be shown at its best by Mr. Weisel who is an organist of prominence playing both in the Second Presbyterian Church and Cameraphone Theatre, Pittsburgh. On the program also are Rev. Wm. Raymond Sammel formerly of Bedford together with Mrs. Sammel (soprano) and whose parts in the program will be greatly enjoyed doubtless as both are splendid musicians.

The program is being arranged by Mr. J. Cloyd Doty of this place who will also take part in it.

Needless to say the Organ is of the latest design in every respect and one of the best in this section and the recital will be a treat doubtless. Tickets can be had at Imler's Drug Store.

MINUTES OF THE OLD AGE ASSISTANCE BOARD

Bedford, Pa., June 3, 1924.
The Old Age Board for Bedford County met in the jury room of the court house, all three members—May of Hyndman, VanHorn of Everett and Smith of Bedford being present.

The first order of business taken up was a communication from the Commission at Harrisburg suggesting that but little attention should be given to an applicant who reports any considerable amount of money saved up. (By considerable amount is meant any sum from say $300 or more) but that an effort should be made to find those in actual need.

There were quite a lot of applications; nineteen were passed favorable and after being properly signed were sent on to the Commission where final action will be taken and the applicants be notified at the proper time. Nine were tabled as it was apparent from the application, or from the references, that the applicant was not in need. These applications will again be taken up when the funds become more plentiful. As it is it must be readily understood that an allowance granted to any unneeded applicant must necessarily keep some worthy one from being provided for. Several were held over for lack of reference letters. Some persons to whom said letters are sent are very slow in answering notwithstanding that an addressed and stamped envelope is always enclosed. The Board has never yet resorted to the method provided in the law for obtaining information and has no desire to do so, and if these few simple questions be answered all will be well for a time at least. All the Board wants and asks for is plain truth. (It might be advisable to say here that the Board has the power under this law to compel any witness to appear and testify on any application on which he or she has been named as a reference.)

Personally speaking we believe this is a great work and the sooner we have some money available for the relief of those old folks the sooner will its greatness be made manifest, and the great point is to abstain from its abuse.

Respectfully submitted,
H. G. Smith, Secy.

BEDFORD GIRL HONORED

At the commencement exercises at Hood College, Frederick, Md. on Wednesday, June 11th, out of a class of 57 to be graduated Miss Margaret Pepple of Bedford was one of the nine honor graduates. This distinction came to her because of the high average maintained by her in her studies during the four years of her college course.

MORGART—CORLE

Yesterday at noon a very beautiful wedding was solemnized in the Reformed Church at Fishertown by the Reformed minister of Roaring Springs. The contracting parties were Miss Dorcas Corle, of Fishertown, a graduate nurse from the Roaring Spring hospital and Howard Morgart of Altoona a teacher in the Altoona public schools. Both parties are very favorably known and have the best wishes and hearty congratulations of a host of friends.

MORE NEWS FROM THE NEAR EAST

Jerusalem, May 21st.

If you people back in Bedford County find me walking around the streets of Bedford, when I get back carrying all my bundles, books, jugs, jars, buckets, etc., on my head you will know that I have gotten the Near East habit, for it seems to me every other man, woman or child carries his burden there. The funniest thing I have noticed yet was an old barefooted woman going along the road yesterday carrying her sandals on her head. I have seen men walking along the road, with a burden of 150 say 200 pounds on their back and supported by a rope drawn across the top of the head, the head supporting two thirds of the weight. My large suit case weighs over 100 lbs., my small one near forty and I have seen these two and another one strapped on back and head the same way. Building material is not hauled on trucks or wagons, but on the backs, top and sides of camel and donkeys are roped on. Yesterday I saw a camel coming down the road with a marble slab a foot thick, and about 4 feet wide and 4 or 5 feet long, fastened on top and roped around and under. How in the name of gracious they keep 'em from sliding around I don't know. Yesterday a camel came along the road, on each side of it was roped a large store box, a box possibly 4 feet square like Espen-schade would receive packed with dry goods. They were marked in plain English to a New York firm and labeled "Egyptian Goods", there you have it. Egyptian goods made in Palestine and sold in America. The camel here around Jerusalem are monstrous fellows as compared with those in Syria or Northern Palestine and believe me I never knew just what the girl meant that told me one time I was as ugly as a camel, for they are about the most ungainly piece of animal life one could imagine and seems to me they'd get hungry waiting for their food to reach their stomachs, even after they had chewed it. But the camel and the little donkey, or as we call 'em out West burros are certainly beasts of burden over here and sure footed ones, the donkey I judge is the strongest for he always leads the procession. You will find one of these little fellows and to him is tied a camel and to that camel another until there is a whole train of them linked up and the donkey leads the way and looks to be pulling the whole bunch. Our party rode donkeys around the walls of Jerusalem yesterday and out to the Near East Orphanage afterwards possibly seven miles and I don't know if mine wasn't cushioned properly or not, but I have been inclined to eat my meals at the side board today. The trouble with the blamed little thing, was that he didn't grow tall enough for me and I had a time keeping my feet off the ground. He carried me all right up and down in and out over the rough stony paths and when he got tired I carried him? Think I'll bring one along home in my vest pocket for Poppy Robison to ride. The name of my mount was Banana, his legs were about 18 inches and his ears twenty four, more or less.

Speaking about our donkey ride to the Near East Orphanage here I would say I have now seen their work in Athens, Beirut, Sidon, Nazareth and here at Jerusalem. Their carpenter shop at Nazareth is within a hundred feet of where tradition has it, that our Savior worked as a carpenter. Oh pardon me again if I say that any American who sees what I have seen of their work here, and without his gifts, is not worthy the blessing that he enjoys in being an American, for they are a bunch of happy boys and girls, smiling, who call we Americans their fathers, and mothers, and we have not only saved a life, but saved a life that is in training in such a way as to go out and help make a better world. It will only be a few years more they will need us, don't fail them. There are near 900 boys and girls in the Jerusalem orphanage and just two Americans in charge a man and a young lady. So you can see there are no large salaries or numerous ones to pay for all the rest are native workers at native wages. The Nazareth Orphanage put on a play especially for our party entitled

THE RETURN AND THE REBUILDING OF THE TEMPLE

LESSON TEXT—Ezra 1:1-11; 3:8-6:22.
GOLDEN TEXT—"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God."—Isa. 40:1.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Building a House for God.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Love for God's House.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Rebuilding of the Temple.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Significance of the Return.

I. The Return from Captivity Predicted (Jer. 29:10-14).

It seems that false prophets were flourishing in Babylon, telling the people that they would speedily be restored to their own land. To counteract this the Lord moved Jeremiah to send a letter to the captives in Babylon (Jer. 29:1-9). In this letter he advised them to settle down and quietly pursue their regular callings of life and not to be led astray by false prophets.

1. The Length of the Captivity (v. 10). Their coming back was to be "after seventy years." From Daniel 9:2 it is clear that seventy years means a definite time. It dates from the time when the first company was taken captive among which Daniel was found.

II. The Prediction of Captivity Fulfilled (Ezra 1:1-11).

1. The Proclamation of Cyrus (vv. 1-4). This was not by accident, but that the word of the Lord might be fulfilled (v. 1). God never forgets. What He has promised He will do. It was by divine initiation—the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus. In his proclamation he ordered that all who desired should go back and build the house of the Lord God, and those who lacked this inclination should lend assistance by making gifts of silver, gold and beasts.

2. The Response to Cyrus' Proclamation (vv. 5, 6). The company which returned was largely made up of representatives of Judah and Benjamin.

3. Royal Favours (vv. 7-11). Cyrus brought forth the vessels of the house of the Lord which Nebuchadnezzar had carried away from Jerusalem and placed in the house of his gods. This, no doubt, greatly encouraged the Jews, for there were 5,400 vessels returned.

III. The Temple Rebuilt (Ezra 3:8-6:15).

1. The Foundation Laid. This was an auspicious occasion and was celebrated with impressive ceremonies.

(1) The priests in their apparel (v. 10). The priests' garments symbolized their consecration to the Lord's service.

(2) The priests with trumpets (v. 10). These trumpets were made of silver and were used in calling the people together.

(3) The Levites with symbols (v. 10). These were to furnish the instrumental music of the sanctuary, in accordance with the arrangements made by David (1 Chron. 15:10-21).

(4) They sang together by course (v. 11). This means that they sang to one another responsively. The one company sang, "The Lord is good." The other responded, "For his mercy endureth forever."

(5) Mingled weeping and shouting (vv. 12, 13). Some of the older men, who had seen the magnificent and glorious temple of Solomon, which had been destroyed, wept much when they saw how far short the present foundations came from the former temple.</

COLOMBIA

The Cauca Valley, Colombia, Near Cali.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

To show that ocean to Great Lakes traffic is possible, a newspaper headline declared not long ago that a ship had sailed from Bogota, Colombia, to Chicago. Doubtless not one person in a hundred who read the words recognized their absurdity in so far as the "port" of origin is concerned, such is the lack of knowledge in the United States in regard to the by no means far removed republic of Colombia. In reality the headline could be no more justified than one dubbing Reno, Nevada, a "port" because goods from that city, carried a hundred miles by rail, were shipped at Sacramento.

Bogota lies on a great plateau a mile and three quarters above sea level and thousands of feet above the rapids that mark the head of navigation for steamers on the Magdalena river, a hundred miles away. Because of this high location Bogota is one of the most delightful capitals of South America—a temperate zone city deep in the tropics, barely 300 miles from the equator. There, on a site dependent on mule-back transportation until a few years ago, has grown up a city comparable in size to New Haven, Conn., or Memphis, Tenn. It is a city of beautiful homes, colleges and schools, and has a club and social life that put it on a par with some European capitals.

It would be difficult to choose a more delightful setting for a city than the site of Bogota. To the east rise high mountains; to the north and south stretches an extensive, fertile upland plain; and at some distance to the west are hills and beyond more high mountains. Bogota's rather paradoxical situation in the shadow of the equator yet essentially in the temperate zone, is proved by a journey over its adjacent plains where the potatoes, corn and other grains and vegetables of our Middle West flourish. The testimony of the thermometer is equally eloquent. The mean temperature is about 60 degrees Fahrenheit, the mercury seldom rising above 75 degrees or falling below 55 degrees. A reasonable amount of rain falls and altogether the city is blessed with a "white man's climate."

Colombia's Strong Points.

The republic of which Bogota is the capital may some day be one of the most important countries of South America because of its unique and convenient location, its vast resources, and its climatic assets. It is the only country of the southern continent that has a coast line on both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. And both ocean outlets are extensive; the country borders the Atlantic for more than 600 miles, while its Pacific seaboard is only slightly less in extent. On both oceans are several good ports, and numerous others that engineering skill can make useful.

Colombia covers close to half a million square miles, a region about as great as all the southeastern section of the United States east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio river and the southern line of Pennsylvania. And thanks to its great mountain masses and plateaus, its lowlands and valleys, it has a range of climatic conditions that could be approached in the United States only by journeying from the tip of Florida to the northern boundary of Maine.

The Andes, which are fairly compared in Ecuador, separate into three branches in Colombia, the western, central and eastern cordillera. The real heart of the country in population and development lies between the two outer cordilleras in the great Cauca valley to the west of the central ridge and the greater Magdalena valley and the Bogota plateau on its other side. The steep Pacific slope on the westward side of the western cordillera is as yet little developed, largely, no doubt, because of its tremendous rainfall. There is no seasonal let up in the precipitation in this strip of territory; the rain falls almost continuously and at one station the annual total is more than 31 feet.

Largely because of saturated ground floods and a rank jungle growth, it is required 40 miles to build 75 miles of railroad through the western strip of Colombia from the Pacific port, Buenaventura, to Cali. Riding along this road through virtual tunnels of verdure, one gains the impression that it is only because trains continue to pass and to wash too venturesome roots and branches and tendrils that the jungle does not wholly overrun the right of way. Palms, bamboos, ferns, and an endless variety of vines and parasitic plants form almost impenetrable walls that line the track for miles. There is no dust, for the soil is never far below saturation, and the foliage always looks as though it had been freshly scrubbed.

As the traveler ascends the western Andes the effect of altitude and local barriers on his surroundings becomes fascinating. Topping an auxiliary ridge he leaves the dense tropical forest behind, for the ridge is a barrier to the heavy moisture-bearing clouds. Beyond it is grass land, only reasonably well watered. But once across the valley and on the climb again up the main mountain range beyond, he passes out of the "rain shadow" and finds that moisture has taken up its forest building again. This new forest zone, however, is no longer tropical. The reduced temperature due to altitude has made it into a semi-tropical land with plants and animals and birds as distinct as if it were a thousand miles instead of a dozen from the steamy forest that was first traversed. Then one tops the main ridge of the western Andes, and again the scene is shifted as suddenly as in a theater. To the east of the crest one is again in a "rain shadow" and the downward slopes are bare of trees, but covered with grass.

Cauca Valley Almost Ideal.

This is the beginning of one of Colombia's principal geographic divisions, the Cauca valley, approximately 40 miles wide, which extends for more than 500 miles between the tall walls of the western and central Andes. Granted that one wishes to live in a mildly tropical climate, the upper Cauca valley would seem to be one of the half-dozen best locations in all the world. Its floor near Cali, metropolis of the vale, has an altitude of 3,500 feet and a moderate rainfall which gives it an agreeable reasonably warm climate; and almost at arm's length on either side is whatever cooler temperature he may wish, at which to spend his vacations and holidays and even week-ends.

The soil's fertility seems beyond the possibility of exhaustion. On some plantations sugar cane has grown luxuriantly for a century and a quarter without fertilization; and grass once established on the cattle ranges, goes on furnishing the raw material for good beef year in and year out. Since man does not live on sugar and beef alone, one other valuable factor in the Cauca valley's favor is worth noting: the beautiful scenery that meets the eye at every turn, whether in the crisp rays of the morning sun, the warm noonday, or the mellow afterglow of the mountain sunsets.

Down the valley flows the Cauca river whose steamers furnish a delightful means of transportation toward the outside world. As one steams down the stream the country takes on a more and more tropical aspect. Savannas give way to groves of bamboo and plantain and these to deep primeval forests with birds of brilliant plumage and interesting families of monkeys.

Over the central Andes and into the valley through which flows the country's greatest river, the Magdalena, one finds in a way a repetition of conditions in the Cauca valley. The Magdalena valley is deeper, however, and in it one finds real tropical heat. But the region between the central Andes and their eastern brothers is not all tropical valley. The distance between these two ranges of mountains is 100 miles or more, and much of it is occupied by the supremely important tableland of Bogota. This lies at an elevation of more than 8,000 feet, so high that the unpleasantness of the tropics is all extracted, leaving the North American to enjoy the sort of climate that his own country can show at its best. There is little wonder that the city built here hundreds of years ago, even if it is remote from the seacoast, has become the center of the national life.

showed the life of Joseph from the time his brothers cast him into the pit and then sold him into Egypt, until he makes himself known to his brothers, that was wonderful. Even the costumes were designed and made by the boys and I predict that that presentation by those boys could run among the churches in America seven days a week.

"Joseph and his Brothers", which goes the first dining gong which means 7:20, the second one goes off at 7:30 and then we rush to the dining room of this Hotel Allenby to have practically the same meal as we had last night and the night before and on back. My oh my what I'd give for about five to ten gallons of Laher's fresh strawberry Ice Cream right now. I'd take it into dinner and be the most popular fellow in town. Ice cream does not appear over here, they use tea instead.

We pack up tonight to ra 7:00 A. M. start for Cairo, reaching there about eleven tomorrow night, so I'll have to "finish" as they say over here with the accent on the last syllable and in the next several days try to write an item on Jerusalem for you.

I mailed 167 cards to Bedford folks today. If any friend was missed and lost of them were, be assured that it was not purposely done but because I was not twins to get more out.

Don't "Listen In" On a Party Line

Some people, when they take down the receiver of a party line and discover voices on the line, do not hang up at once, but proceed to "listen in," hoping, of course, that the other people will quit talking so they can use the 'phone.

In the interest of courtesy and good service to say nothing of the loss in transmission caused by "listening in," the third party should, of course, hang up the receiver and give the users a reasonable amount of time to complete their conversation before trying to use the line again. The Golden Rule comes in handy in such cases.

All are signs of kidney sickness!

Here's Bedford testimony:

E. E. Carnell, 313 E. Penn St., says: "When I stooped, I was taken with a sharp, knife-like pain across my back. Occasionally, a stitch took me across my kidneys. Mornings I felt tired and lame. Once in awhile I had to get up nights to pass the secretions as my kidneys were so weak. After taking Doan's Pills, however, I was cured and have had no occasion to use them since."

The Harding-Coolidge administration passed 104 bills to investigate the Wilson administration and nothing was found wrong. The 104 bills fell flat. The number of bills passed by the Democrats and the Progressive Republicans is not one tenth of 104 and so much crookedness is unearched that no statistician can keep track of indictments and exposures. It's awful! And yet the people voted for it.

FATHER TRIES IT ONCE

This bald bard did the family wash all on a summer's day, between the hay and harvest times, while Hannah was away. He meant to follow Hannah's plan, and yet it came about that all the dirt was boiled in, instead of boiled out. He failed to sort out sheep and goats, but held it too much better to wash dark garments in one batch and light ones in another. He went too rashly at his tasks, and he had scarce begun them, before with steam he burned his hands and on the washboard skinned them. His wicked words in modest type he stated to print, but one word rhymed with Abraham and one with Ishmael. When gentle Hannah driving home had topped a steep incline, she lifted up her eyes and saw that washing on the line. Whatever would the neighbors think, what would the neighbors say; she took another good long look and fainted dead away. At our house Monday mornings now, the curious neighbors come to see the whirling of the wheels and hear the motor hum. For Hannah sings a happy song the while she handles suds and sees a patent washer work to agitate the suds. And such machines as this would soon in any home appear where father did a washing job as oft as once a year.

HUGH PENDEXTER

COPYRIGHT by THE BOBBES-MERRILL CO.

"It's for the woman to get the meals."

San Juan stepped back and stared whimsically at Dinsdale. Like an old housewife, weighted with responsibilities, the girl fried the bacon and made the coffee, then fried the bread in the bacon fat. She had been used to hard work. After they had eaten and while she was washing the utensils at the spring San Juan murmured:

"What's to be done with her?"

Dinsdale frowned and rubbed his jaw, then gave it up.

"Time enough to decide that when we get to Deadwood," he said.

"Kitty will take care of her," mused the gambler.

"Kitty?" repeated Dinsdale.

"Friend of mine. Good friend, too, but it won't do to stick here any longer. We're too near the canyon. The Injuns may be sneaking round these parts. We must be going."

They followed the road toward Custer and frequently passed old prospect holes, dug the year before, and not a few deserted cabins. At midday they rounded a low hill and came in sight of the town, the first to be laid out in the Black hills and now an excellent example of a "busted" boom. In 1875, when white men were taboo in the hills, it had been a magic town, with a main street half a mile long and crowded with business houses and respectable resorts. Now its merchants and gamblers and its painted women were hunting their profits in Deadwood City. There were some hundred and fifty inhabitants, mostly men, in the town, with row after row of dwellings left to the ravages of squirrels and kindred mischief workers.

San Juan took his companions to a hotel, where the girl was given a room while the men ordered dinner. When she rejoined them they nodded approval. Although her pale face and thin features made her look all eyes, there was no ignoring her neatly brushed hair, fine as spun silk. She glanced shyly at them and said:

"I ain't thanked you for what you've done for me."

"Never mention it," said San Juan, bowing gallantly. "Now we'll eat."

He ushered them into the dining room, pulled out a chair for Lottie Carl and seated her with quite the grand manner.

The fare was bountiful, and Lottie Carl found that the tragedy had not killed her appetite. They had finished and the gambler was cutting the end from a cigar when a man rushed into the room and hoarsely cried out:

"Wild Bill's been shot! Done to death from behind by that dirty snake of a Jack McCall! D—n him! If Deadwood City ain't stretched his miserable weasand before now it oughter be bust'd flatter than this town even is."

"But Wild Bill Hickock! Some one got the drop on Wild Bill?" incredulously gasped Dinsdale.

"Got the drop, h—l!" howled the newsbearer. "McCall took grubstakes from him. Made off to be everlastingly obliged to him. Then stood behind him while Bill was playing a few cards and shot him through the back of the head. S'pose that stunk would 'a' daved make a move if Wild Bill had had half a eye on him? An' at that Bill had a gun pulled clear of the holster an' cocked when they picked him up from the table where he fell, face down."

San Juan sorrowfully lamented. "Wild Bill was white. Too bad. Too bad."

They left the dining room and found that the hotel and town was alive with the news. From the hotel proprietor San Juan bought a roll of blankets for the girl and some cooked food, and hired a horse. When they struck on the corduroy road that led to Deadwood City San Juan was keen to make fast time; but the girl, wearied by her terrible experiences and unused to horseback riding, made haste an impossibility. Dinsdale detected his companion's impatience and suggested that he ride on ahead, adding:

"I'll fetch Lottie Carl along."

"No; I'll stick along with you two. There's probably some excitement in town over Wild Bill's death, and I'd like to be there."

The travelers passed through fair valleys, richly grassed, that would have delighted the heart of the husbandman. According to Dinsdale's count they crossed Spring creek thirty-one times in traveling a dozen miles. They made their camp on the head waters of this stream, and built a lean-to, or half-faced camp, for the girl. She fastidiously attended to the cooking.

Early in the morning, while the valley was still swathed in white fog, they were up and eating and soon on their way. A short ride brought them to Hill City, which interested Dinsdale hugely. There were two hundred log houses, many of them uncompleted, and not a solitary inhabitant.

Deadwood City again was the answer for this wholesale abandonment. Once the citizens heard of the poor man's diggings in the northern gulch they had stampeded as one.

That noon they rode into Rapid City on the creek of the same name. This town and its immediate environs were bustling with mining activities, the first the travelers had witnessed since leaving Red canyon.

It was at Rapid City that the gambler and Dinsdale learned how McCall, slayer of Wild Bill, had been arraigned the night before by a so-called "citizens' or 'minors' committee, had been acquitted and furnished with a good horse and allowed to try his luck in escaping from the hills. And there were those who had watched the stage road ever since the word was received, hoping that the murderer would ride within range of their rifles.

"Let him go, eh?" mused San Juan.

"That's too bad! Wonder what's behind it?"

"Looks as if he might be able to tell things that some one doesn't want told," commented Dinsdale savagely.

Fourteen miles were covered before San Juan selected the next camping place, a restful spot in Spring valley.

The night passed quietly, and another ride into the fog was commenced. A few miles off they overtook a man leading a diminutive burro. The animal was all but concealed by camping gear, tent and blankets. Lashed on top of the load was a Henry rifle, forerunner of the Winchester. Juan waved his hand and saluted:

"How now, 'Pyrites'? Another rich strike?"

The man halted and blinked up at them, revealing a weather-worn face that was traversed by a network of tiny wrinkles. From the corner of his mouth San Juan informed Dinsdale:

"Old 'Iron Pyrites,' best sample of perpetual prospector you ever saw. He'd quit millions in a sure thing to pan out new gravel. I grubstake him."

"Howdy, Joey!" joyously cried Pyrites, now finding his tongue. "Ain't crack anything but rich prospects this trip, but I'll uncover the real article on the next. Found some mighty rich indications. Who's your friends?"

The gambler made Lottie Carl and Dinsdale known, and briefly told of the massacre in the canyon. Pyrites stared sympathetically at the girl.

"Too bad, younker," he said. "But this is a mighty fine country to forget things in. You've heard about Bill, hey?"

San Juan nodded gloomily, then explained in deep disgust:

"And to think of letting that McCall go free!"

This was news to Pyrites, for he only yelled:

"Go free? Why, Joey, they just couldn't. They had to hang him! You ain't mean that they didn't hang him, is that it?"

The gambler repeated what had been told him at Rapid City. Once Pyrites was convinced that the murderer's innocence already had been proclaimed by a mob tribunal he swore vehemently. The girl showed alarm, and Dinsdale signaled for a change of the conversation.

Pyrites was not ready to return to Deadwood.

"I want to go a bit slow along here," he explained. "Two or three likely looking spots I want to look at. But I'll be in town as soon as you are, I reckon."

Progress was slow, little better than a walk, because of Lottie Carl; and night found them a good ride from Deadwood City. San Juan Joe, however, accepted the delay philosophically. The nervous haste to get back to the gulch, so obvious in the morning, was entirely lacking, and he entered upon the work of preparing their last camp with the zest of a schoolboy released for the holidays.

CHAPTER III

The Town of High Promise.

They halted their horses at the top of a steep descent early in the afternoon and gazed down into the lower end of Deadwood Gulch. The gulch seemed to end abruptly against a ridge in the middle distance, but San Juan explained that its course was very winding and that it was fully twenty miles long. Both sides of the road were lined with log cabins, shanties of rough boards, and tents.

"It ain't very pretty to look at," indignantly commented Lottie Carl, gazing disapprovingly at the scattered log piles, the survivors of fires and windfalls.

"I agree with Lottie. It isn't much to look at," said Dinsdale.

"Forget the scenery, man. Remember that Deadwood City wasn't laid out till last May and that all supplies and the machinery for the sawmills had to be freighted in for two hundred and fifty miles with much of the road being in hostile country. Deadwood is a great town. No other like it in the world."

And in saying this the gambler spoke with but little, if any, exaggeration; for the mining camp at the junction of the two creeks was a miracle of American enthusiasm and enterprise. Up to the middle of May it had been a tangled wilderness, with the growth so thick and impenetrable that the government exploring expedition of the previous year, sent out to confirm the Custer expedition of 'seventy-four, had not entered the gulch at all.

Since the middle of May, when Craven Lee and Isaac Brown built the first pine log cabin and helped to lay out the streets with a lariat in lieu of a surveyor's chain, it had grown into a business center of feverish activity.

San Juan Joe dismounted before Parkhurst's "Lager Beer Saloon" on the left of the road and announced:

"This is the beginning of Deadwood City. Let's have a glass of beer."

"I'll stay here with Lottie," replied Dinsdale.

San Juan was soon back. As he swung into the saddle he told Dinsdale it was true that Wild Bill's slayer had been acquitted and allowed to leave the town.

On that August day seven-eighths of the Black hills population, or some seven thousand people, were in the town. And it was estimated that seven out of every ten lacked employment and were living from hand to mouth. While justly called the "poor man's digging" there was scant opportunity for late arrivals to go prospecting so long as the fear of the Sioux held the people close to the town.

The talk of the milling crowds was not of gold but of Indians. Even the Chinese laundries abandoned their work in the Centennial wash house and loitered outdoors to pick up scraps of information concerning the warriors of Crazy Horse.

San Juan Joe was one of the best-known men in the gulch. Decent men, as well as the refuse of the world's quarters, passed through his big gambling tent. When he was recognized there was a general crowding forward to greet him and learn the latest news from the south. The gambler did not attempt to speak at first, for he was battered with fierce queries from a score of men at once.

"Where's Crook?"

"Lord! Is the government going to let them devils wipe us out?"

"Have the Crows and Shoshoni joined Crook yet?"

"Where's Terry? Where's Gibson?"

"Why don't the soldiers come?"

The gambler raised a hand for silence and briefly recited what little outside news he had picked up while at Bowman's ranch on the Cheyenne. With more detail he told of the massacre in the canyon and was compelled to wait until the chorus of oaths and yells for vengeance had spent itself.

The wild outburst changed to a cheer and a tremendous exclamation, he spoke of the five Indians slain by him and Dinsdale.

"One word more," cried San Juan. "This little lady is Lottie Carl, the only survivor of the Belman outfit."

"Buy her a pair of shoes," boomed a citizen.

Deafening cheers greeted the suggestion. A blacksmith, still wearing his leather apron and carrying his sledge, shouted:

"Hooraay for five dead soldiers! Let's start it with this!" And he started in from the nearest blacksmith shop into a tiny bar of dust.

There were people in the crowd who did not stop to buy shoes, but the meal was coming, and the crowd of enough others to crowd the corners of the bar. When the collection was handed up to the gambler Dinsdale stripped two greenbacks from a roll as his contribution. Even in the enthusiasm of the moment this act was noted and remembered; for greenbacks were curiosities in the hills and readily commanded a premium of five per cent. San Juan gave generously.

The noisy promoter called for a committee to count the collection. This was done in due form with the gambler as chairman. After a visit to the gold-scales of the nearest store the committee reported that Lottie Carl was richer by thirty-five ounces or six hundred and forty-seven dollars.

Vociferous cheering greeted the announcement. The hat with its wealth was handed to the flush-faced girl. Lottie Carl was too dazed to speak; but San Juan rose in his stirrups and bellowed:

"The little lady wishes me to thank you for her."

Dinsdale leaned forward and spoke rapidly to the gambler, who stared at him in faint surprise, and replied:

"First time you've mentioned it to me."

"I forgot about it. Heard it at Laramie. May not interest them."

"Everything interests us up here."

Again rising in his stirrups and waving his hand for attention, San Juan announced:

"My friend, who's just through from Cheyenne and Fort Laramie, says train-robbers held up the Union Pacific train at Ogala, went through the passengers, took the express and mail."

Low-voiced imprecations rippled through the crowds. Only the great fear of the mighty Sioux nation and its threat to sweep through the hills and exterminate every white person, had restrained the miners from taking up the matter of the many stage robberies.

The three rode on with San Juan explaining:

"Not far to my friend's place where we can leave Lottie."

Dinsdale reined in and pointed to a sign on a long log cabin, which read: MRS. COLT TAKES IN BOARDERS WHO PAY AHEAD.

"Who's Mrs. Colt?" he asked.

"Widow with a rifle. Knows how to use it. Product of the frontier. She has no bad debts."

"Why not take Lottie there?"

"But we've already arranged to take her to see Kitty. Kitty's a wonder."

Soon a new note pervaded the street noises—the shrewish clamor of hurdy-gurdies and the crashing babel of overworked pianos, occasionally relieved by the more dulcet harmony of stringed instruments; for they were now in the thick of the dance halls and tents and bawdy houses. Dinsdale looked very sober. Lottie Carl understood nothing. It was merely so much noise to her.

"This is Kitty's place. Looks better inside," said San Juan, halting before a long two-story building made of rough boards, and having an annex in the form of a big tent. A passageway of canvas joined the tent to the house. Calling a boy to hold their horses, the gambler dismounted and helped the girl from her horse. Dinsdale moved more slowly, revolving something in his mind. As San Juan started to lead them to a side door of the house Dinsdale touched his arm and in a low voice said:

"I s'pose now. She's Kitty the Scherner."

"There's only one Kitty, and she certainly is a master schemer," said San Juan with a laugh.

"I don't like it," persisted Dinsdale. "I warn you I probably shall kick over the traces."

"Not after you've looked into Kitty's eyes."

The side door evidently was something of a private entrance, for it was locked. San Juan gave a sharp double knock. A slide swung back, revealing a small aperture. The opening framed one eye set on the bias, then the door opened and the Chinese attendant stood aside for them to enter.

The place was heavy with the smell of musk, of scented tapers and burning joss-sticks, characteristic of Oriental dives and insufferable to Dinsdale and Lottie Carl. The girl sniffed and coughed and drew close to Dinsdale as her eyes met the gaze of the wrinkled-faced Mongolian. The gambler brusquely commanded:

"Tell your mistress I'm here."

With that, and as one well used to the establishment, he ushered them into a room which quite took Lottie Carl's breath away. Thick rugs littered the floor, and Chinese silks of weird pattern were utilized to hide the ugly ceiling. There were several pictures, all in heavy gilt frames; and an excellent piano stood against the wall.

Lottie Carl continued speechless. It was apparent she had never seen such combinations of colors and comfort.

The gambler watched her with a smile on his lean face. She would be the one to decide, he had assumed, and already he was sure of her verdict. After a life of hardships she would gladly remain in this, to her, fairy environment.

There came the soft swish of skirts in the hall, a pause while a low musical voice gave an order in Chinese. Then Kitty the Scherner stood inside the door, one of the most picturesque and notorious characters to be found in all the history of mining camps' demi-monde.

She was slight of figure, and her face was youthful and showed no signs of dissipation. Her air was that of innocence, pliqued by curiosity. Only those who knew her history could appreciate the dynamic qualities of her spirit. Dinsdale was now recalling how she had, unaided, invaded the Far East and had established two palaces of sin, one in Hongkong, the other in Yokohama.

She took in the three at a glance and extended her slim hand to the gambler. For the first time Dinsdale saw beneath the impassivity of San Juan's face. He clung to her hand and said no word, but his black eyes, blazing down into the upturned face, spoke volumes.

"Lost your voice, Juan?" Kitty asked, her limpid blue eyes turning in welcome to Dinsdale.

The gambler hastened to present his companions. The woman ignored the girl to study Dinsdale. Her subtle mind quickly formed an estimate, and it was entirely in his favor.

Then she deigned to appraise the girl. The rough boots and the dowdy dress prompted a slight smile. With arched brows she glanced from the coarse dress to her own attire, which typed the daintiest lures that civilized shopping would furnish. Beside this paragon of frailty Lottie Carl looked very uncouth.

She extended a welcome to Dinsdale, still ignoring Lottie Carl, and said to the gambler:

"Well, Juan, your eyes tell me you love me. But surely you don't bring Mr. Dinsdale along as a witness. What is it?"

"This girl is the only one left of an outfit trapped in Iled canyon. Dinsdale and I fetched her through. We got five of the Sioux."

"Good boy!" she purred. "Now go and get some road agents."

The gambler completed his explanation by saying: "This girl hasn't any folks. She's all alone in the world. I reckoned you'd take her."

Kitty the Scherner frowned a bit petulantly. "With those eyes—that hair—"

As she hesitated San Juan insisted: "Surely she would do."

"Oh, leave her. I'll see what I can do. Not very interesting to Mr. Dinsdale though, all this."

POULTRY

Condition of Hen House
Factor in Productivity

The condition of their winter quarters is a potent factor in the productivity of poultry flocks. Only healthy, contented hens produce eggs in paying numbers. While on range most hens both lay and pay, because conditions are such that they are perfectly healthy. Sanitation then takes care of itself and constant exercise, coupled with natural selection of food having widely differing properties, gives ideal conditions for high production. Because conditions differ widely in these particulars during the seasons when fowls are confined, results are not as satisfactory.

"To counteract unsatisfactory results," says A. C. Smith, poultry husbandry leader at University Farm, "proper sanitary measures must be practiced. Begin by putting the young flock in a clean house this fall. Clean and disinfect the house thoroughly. Remove and burn all floor and nest litter. Remove all fittings, such as nest, roost, roosting platforms, and water stands; clean and paint with a good liquid disinfectant. Kerosene to which has been added a little strong, crude carbolic acid serves the purpose, as do several commercial disinfectants.

"Brush down the walls and ceiling, remove as much of the old earth as seems necessary, paint the walls with the same disinfectant as the fittings and put in fine or sandy loam to the depth of four to six inches. Replace the fittings, and let the house air well for a week or more before putting in the young stock."

Proper Arrangement of Roosts for Hen Flock

Roosts for chickens should be wide enough to support them; narrow roosts cause cramped positions and crooked breast-bones. The best roosts are scantling of 2 by 3 or 2 by 4, broad side up, with rounded edges. They should be smooth and movable. Roosts need not be very high. Too high roosts cause bumble-foot when the chickens fly down on a hard surface. Heavy breeds require lower roosts than the light breeds. From one and a half to two feet high is a good height. Roosts should not be arranged like stairs. Chickens like to roost on the highest point; the stair arrangement means overcrowding on the upper roost.

Plan to Clean Up Badly Mite-Infested Building

To clean up a badly mite-infested building, proceed as follows: Sweep and dust thoroughly, first removing everything removable. Scrub with washing powder and water. Paint the roosts and supports for the roosts with heated carbolineum. Next, spray the nests and every other bit of woodwork that harbors vermin, or might do so, with crude creosote and distillate, one gallon of each to the mixture. If there were no mites on the walls or floors whitewash would make a good spray for them. In either case the fowls should be shut out of the house until thoroughly dry.

Breeds for Production of White-Shelled Eggs

Poultry of the Mediterranean or egg breeds are best suited for production of white-shelled eggs. Representatives of this class are bred largely for the production of eggs rather than for meat production. Among the popular breeds of this class are: Leghorn, Minorca, Ancona and Andalusian. One of the outstanding characteristics of the egg breeds is the fact that they are classed as nonsitters. That is, as a rule they do not become broody and hatch their eggs. When fowls of this class are kept, artificial incubation and brooding are usually employed.

Oyster Shells Are Good to Form Shells of Eggs

Ordinarily, the hen does not consume enough lime to form the shells of eggs if she is laying abundantly unless something besides the ordinary grain feeds is accessible to her. Oyster shells are very good for this purpose. A box of crushed shells may be placed before the fowls, allowing them to eat at will. Old mortar and fine gravel are also useful in supplying lime.

POULTRY NOTES

Plenty of bone and muscle-forming rather than fattening feed is needed for growing poultry. Leave the fattening business alone until near selling time.

Turkey hens are probably the best breeders between the ages of two and five or six years.

Pullets that are undersized, lacking vigor, deformed or hatched too late for winter production, should be culled.

Each year a nice little profit could be made by the average farmer by giving his hens a little study, and culling out the poor layers, thus allowing more room for the good layers, saving on feed, labor, time and closer attention.

LIVE STOCK

Proper Ventilation Is Big Boon to Live Stock

If your stable has a foul, stifling odor in the morning and if there is frost on the side walls and ceiling, then your building needs ventilation, says E. A. Stewart of the agricultural engineering division at University farm. It is not always possible to keep out all frost, but there should be very little, if any, except during the bitter cold days of winter.

"Barns should have walls that are built to keep in the warmth of the stock," says Mr. Stewart. "There should not be cracks around doors and windows, where the snow and icy blasts can blow in. It is best to use storm windows on all openings into the stable. Do not have a large stable with only a few head of stock in it. If you do not need all of the room, partition off a part of it. Even a canvas can be used for this purpose. A cow should not be required to heat more than 700 cubic feet of space; about 550 cubic feet is an average value. A horse may be expected to heat about 1,000 cubic feet of space, but 700 or 800 cubic feet is a fair value.

"Make sure that the air intakes are provided with shutters or dampers, so that you can control the amount of air coming in. Likewise, a shutter is needed on the foul air flues to control the amount of air removed. It is a good investment to buy a thermometer for your stable. Hang it in front of the stanchions, about level with your head. The temperature of the barn should be about 32 to 40 degrees when outside temperatures are around zero or 10 below. With the proper number of cattle or horses in it, and with the ventilators working properly, a well-built barn will not be colder inside than 35 degrees, even at outside temperatures of 30 degrees below zero."

Prof. E. A. Stewart, University farm, St. Paul, will give further information on ventilation if you will write to him.

Silage in Ewe's Ration Proves Very Profitable

A preliminary experiment at the Colorado experiment station in feeding silage to ewes along with alfalfa hay showed four pounds more gain for silage-fed ewes than those fed alfalfa alone. Lambs from silage-fed ewes weighed one-quarter pound more at birth and averaged four pounds heavier one month after lambing ended. Neither lot received grain till the end of the lambing period. Allowing 8 cents per pound for gains on lambs and ewes and valuing hay at $14, the silage was worth $6.80 per ton for wintering ewes.

At the Purdue station, in three years' trial, ewes gained more when fed silage with hay, compared with hay alone and their lambs weighed slightly more. Valuing the hay fed at $3 per ton, the silage was worth $3.20 per ton. At the Iowa experiment station ewes fed a ration of corn silage with a small amount of oats and bran produced lambs weighing 8.02 pounds at birth and all strong and healthy. Ewes fed clover hay alone for roughage with some corn, oats and bran produced lambs weighing 8.19 pounds, but cost 1.37 cents per day as compared to .78 cents per day for the silage lot. Ewes fed corn silage with clover hay and a little oats and bran produced lambs weighing 8.63 pounds, and the feed cost 1.02 cents per day.

These figures should be sufficient to show the high value of corn silage for breeding ewes. Moldy silage should not be fed.

Causes for Abortion in Brood Sows Are Traced

It is now known that abortion in sows is caused by a germ practically identical with the one that causes contagious abortion in cows. The germ has been found in the aborted pigs, afterbirth, discharges from the sow, and even in her first milk. A sow that has once aborted may remain infected but carry pigs full time and yet spread infection in her vaginal discharges. Her blood and that of any sow or gilt affected with the disease, whether abortion has occurred or not, will be likely to respond to the laboratory tests by which the infection is detected.

The infection is contracted by healthy gilts and sows eating feed contaminated by vaginal discharges of an affected sow, or devouring afterbirths or aborted pigs. The herd boar may become infected but may throw the disease off in about two months. A sow becomes infected in about twenty-four days after eating infected feed. The average period of pregnancy at which abortion occurs is 65 days. It may occur as early as 24 days and as late as 90 days.

Abundant Exercise Most Important for the Jack

Many rules in the care of stallions apply to jacks as well. Abundant exercise is, if possible, more important for the jack because of his sluggish nature. In addition to the exercise possible in a roomy box stall and a large paddock, some road work is almost necessary.

Kindness and firmness in handling the young jack determine his disposition and to a large extent his future usefulness.

FARM STOCK

Tuberculin Test Should Be Applied to All Stock

Since tuberculosis continues to be probably the most important disease affecting man and the lower animals, causing in man alone one-tenth of the deaths from all causes and occasioning an economic loss in the United States of over $200,000,000 annually, a few facts relative to the present status of this disease may be opportune.

1. The disease is caused by a specific germ so small that a magnification of nearly 1,000 diameters is necessary in order to see it distinctly.

2. It is possible to isolate the germ from both man and animal tissues affected with tuberculosis and to grow same on artificial media.

3. The germ of tuberculosis is quite resistant to many of the natural influences that affect bacteria and if embedded in sputum will withstand the direct rays of the sun for 24 hours or longer. In dark recesses at low temperature, the germs may live for many months and even a 5 per cent strength of carbolic acid requires 24 hours to effect destruction of these organisms.

4. In addition to man, practically all mammals are susceptible.

5. Among the lower animals the disease is most frequently seen in cattle and hogs. Horses and sheep are rarely affected.

6. In man the disease may involve the lungs, (pulmonary tuberculosis; consumption), the intestines; be confined to the lymph glands, or the skin, or it may be localized in the bones and joints.

7. It is a very common disease of chickens, although turkeys and pigeons also frequently suffer from it. Ducks and geese do not appear to be susceptible.

8. Fowls apparently do not contract the disease from diseased cattle, although swine may do so.

9. Heredity plays but a very minor part in the transmission or communication of this disease.

10. Tuberculosis may be contracted by inhaling air contaminated with the germs, or by the organism gaining entrance into the digestive tract with various articles of food, particularly milk.

11. Cattle are frequently affected with both the intestinal and lung forms. The udder of cattle is not an uncommon location for the disease.

12. A large share of the cases in children showing the intestinal form of the disease is due to the tubercle germ of bovine origin being transmitted through milk from diseased animals.

13. Animals may be fairly "rotten" with the disease without any symptoms being manifest.

14. Tuberculosis in cattle, swine and fowls can be diagnosed with a high degree of accuracy by means of the tuberculin test. The ones showing a positive reaction should be disposed of at once.

15. Tuberculosis is a preventable disease and will decrease in prevalence with the development of sanitation, personal hygiene, supervision of the production and distribution of milk by health officers; veterinary inspection of all meat products designed for food; and the universal application of the tuberculin test to all cattle, but particularly those supplying milk for human consumption.—William H. Feldman, Pathology Section, Colorado Experiment Station

Careful Management Big Need in Building Herd

It takes good feeding, careful management and considerable patience to build up a herd. Good food alone cannot do much if feed and care are neglected. When handling registered cattle, the calves must be properly recorded and marked so that the pedigree may be correctly certified. It means considerable loss to sell a purebred as a grade because it has lost its identity or its breeding is not known.

Culling is highly important. A breeder should not be afraid to sell inferior animals for beef. Culls appear in the best herds. Weeding out is a necessary part of the breeding business. A scrub purebred is a bad advertisement for the seller, as well as an injury to the buyer. A satisfied customer is likely to be a permanent customer, while a buyer who feels he has been loaded up with unsatisfactory stock can spoil a good deal of business for the breeder. After a breeder gets to the point where he has a well-selected herd of purebred cattle, a well-merited reputation and a number of satisfied buyers to advertise his stock, he can be assured of a good income. He will have the additional satisfaction of knowing that he has a real part in the building of one of the state's great industries.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE ITEMS

Altoona.—Two men were injured and many chickens and turkeys killed in a wreck in the Pennsylvania yards here. The injured, who were in charge of the poultry car, jumped when the crash occurred. The wreck was caused by a broken wheel.

Harrisburg.—Analysis of drinking water along state highways was begun by officials of the state department of health. An ambulance, converted into a field laboratory, took the road at the extreme eastern end of the Lincoln highway, opening the movement designed to protect the health of motorists who use wayside drinking water. As soon as the tests are made results will be sent field engineers, who will trail the analysis for the purpose of posting the drinking places. It also is proposed to examine the sanitary conditions in roadside eating places.

Waynesboro.—Austin Carbaugh, of near Mont Alto, died from injuries through being struck by an automobile. He was walking along the road near Mercersburg, when struck by the automobile of C. W. Reese, of Upton.

Altoona.—Adam Johns, 20, touched a lighted cigarette to a dynamite cap he was holding in his left hand. The cap exploded, blowing off the ends of his fingers and lacerating his palm and arms.

Orbitonla.—In attempting to cross the street James Gulland, aged 8, was run down by a motor car and lived only a half hour after the accident.

Lewistown.—Falling 25 feet from a fire escape to a cement sidewalk without sustaining any serious harm was the feat accomplished by Julia, 4-year-old daughter of George G. Baker. Her parents took her to the office of Dr. Weaver, who found her injuries consisted only of a bruised leg and hip.

Altoona.—Visiting her husband's barber shop unexpectedly, Mrs. Cecil Neff found a strange man in the place and detained him until the police could be notified.

Mt. Carmel.—Burglars got into the store of John Zaleski. Exchange, over the transom and stole $200 worth of merchandise, including a clock. John, Jr., went to the home of Wally Rawa, where he chanced to see the familiar clock on the mantle. Rawa was arrested and placed in jail for a hearing, but escaped through a window in the jail and is still at large.

Sunbury.—A pure white robin was found in the city by Mrs. J. K. Smith the first of its kind ever seen here. The bird was but a few weeks old and had apparently left the nest too soon. Professor E. F. Keefer, of the high school faculty, an expert, declared it an albino.

Norristown.—A $10,000 load of liquor was stolen by several men who imposed upon the wife of Thomas Minnick, of Germantown pike in the suburbs of this city. Minnick was formerly in the distilling business and had in his home a truck load of proof-stored wine and gin. He was about to move to Philadelphia and was seeking to obtain the necessary papers to transport the liquor when three men in a truck appeared and told Mrs. Minnick her husband had obtained the necessary permit and had sent them for the liquor. She fell for the suggestion, and it was not until four hours later that she learned from her husband she had been imposed upon. Then she notified the police, but without result.

Philadelphia.—In a sudden fit of temper, Fatima, the 2-year-old hippopotamus at the Zoological Gardens bit her 5-months-old offspring, Bobby to death. Nervousness, due to a sudden change of weather, is blamed for the animal's act. Bobby was the third hippo calf his mother has presented to the Philadelphia zoo.

Reading.—Owen Weaver, aged 19 serving a sentence of from six to nine years for robbery, made a desperate effort to escape from the Berks jail but was captured by two fellow prisoners in the face of a brick bombardment of other convicts. Prompt action on the part of Engineer Frank Traylor prevented a near riot in the prison yard, when four convicts showed the rustles with missiles Weaver, known as the 17-year-old pay roll bandit, held up the employees of the Jackson rope works about two years ago and in December, 1922 was sent to the Eastern Penitentiary, but returned here owing to crowded conditions in the big prison.

Allentown, Pa.—Judge Claude T. Reno, in an opinion handed down in court, denied the petition of John G. Mealy, former wholesale liquor dealer of this city, for the return of large quantities of wines and liquors seized in the vault of his home here last year when the place was raided by state police, who blew up the cache with dynamite.

Connellsville.—Virtually all independent coke and coal companies are expected to announce a 20 to 30 per cent wage reduction.

New Castle.—Mrs. Jeannette W. Hutton was appointed register of deeds and recorder of wills for Lawrence county, succeeding Will Neff deceased.

Freeland.—John Quinn of Mintersville, an auditor of the A. S. Kemmerer Coal Company, operating coal mines in this section, was found dead in the room of his hotel here. Heart trouble is believed to have been the cause.

Harrisburg.—Members of the Prohibition state committee re-elected Dr. B. P. Pugh Harrisburg, chairman; Thomas H. Hamilton, Harrisburg, treasurer, and Charles H. Runnell, Shippensburg, secretary.

Pittsburgh.—The congregation of St. John's Lutheran church, in McCandless township, discovered that vandals had stripped the church bare of furnishings when they arrived for services. The only rug remaining was the one under the piano.
